

the Old Spanish Trail headquarters at San Antonio supplied travelogs and special information. Then came Herral Ayres' visit among the northern editors and the feature articles telling that the Old Spanish Trail country was open — and then the Saint Augustine celebration and the motorcade across the continent and that far-reaching publicity.

"The Old Spanish Trail is in every publication I see," wrote the superintendent of the Saint Augustine Record Company to Herral Ayres. "No one except yourself could do this."

The second motorcade, from Saint Augustine to San Diego, in October, 1929, was conducted to again spread abroad news that the Old Spanish Trail was open from the Atlantic to the Pacific. This was organized by the people of Pensacola, O. H. L. Wernicke leader.

San Antonio Fulfills the Trust

The San Antonio Executive Board published its report and an audit of the finances and declared the work of the San Antonio headquarters closed. Ten years of service had been given to the cause; now it was urged that others should take up the work. This widespread recognition however continues to keep the mail active with inquiries that entail responsibility and cost time and money to properly answer.

Decoration From the King of Spain

Premier de Rivera cabled congratulations in the name of His Majesty the King. Now comes to Herral Ayres, who has led this work thru these years, distinguished honor from the Spanish Crown, and thru him honor and recognition to all that have done their part in this Old Spanish Trail work.

A Concluding Thought

In 1528, four centuries ago, a large Spanish expedition landed near the present Tampa Bay, Florida. That expedition of Pánfilo de Narváez fought its way around to the present Tallahassee country. Indian opposition was vigorous. At the bay south of Tallahassee they called San Marco they built crude barges and sought to escape to Mexico. Some barges sank on the way; others were wrecked on the Texas shore. Narváez's treasurer, Nuñez Alvar Cabéza de Vaca, and three others, lived slaves to the Indians for six years, the only survivors of the expedition, then escaped across this part of Texas, passed thru or near the present El Paso, and in 1530, eight years after their proud landing in Florida, reached Culiacan on the west coast of Mexico. Thus, may it be said, was the first Spanish Trail blazed across the continent. During nearly three centuries following the Spanish carried their explorations and their mission works thruout the southern part of the continent. Saint Augustine, San Antonio, El Paso and San Diego became Spanish capitals and centers for mission works. New Orleans was settled and developed by the French and for a period was ruled by the Spanish and their works were extended in that Louisiana country. The Tucson-Nogales country in Arizona became an important mission center. And thru these old Spanish centers the Old Spanish Trail of today carries travelers rapidly and in comfort. Relics and works of the padres and conquistadores excite interest and wonder. The people of a modern race pray the history and works of that pioneer and heroic race may be preserved for the enjoyment of posterity.
