BANDERA LOOP

Marked TL 10
San Antonio to Bandera and on into Kerrville, where it joins the Main Line of the Old Spanish Trail, from San Antonio for 27 miles there is a fine surfaced road. Then come roads of varying character, but dragged and improved.

The Bandera country is a section of scenic attraction. Bandera Pass is noted for two famous battles. Long before the Revolutionary War, the Spanish were colonizing San Antonio and establishing the missions. Many Indian tribes peacefully accepted the ministrations of Mission Fathers and helped build the missions and develop the irrigation and other works of the ambitious communal life fostered by the Spaniards. Apaches lived in the Bandera hills, and frequently raided the San Antonio colony. The King of Spain detailed troops, and General Bandera fought a bloody three-day battle and the Apaches were driven westward. In later years the Apaches burned their name deep in the annals of the far west.
A hundred years later, 1840, when Texas was a Republic, Captain Jack Hays and a band of Rangers fought another bloody battle of the Pass with the Comanches. That, too, became a notable day in the perilous game of conquering an empire.

Between Bandera and Center Point is old Camp Verde, where, when Jefferson Davis was Secretary of War, his experiment in using camels for this country was tried out. Their soft feet could not stand the rocky soil. The people will tell of many thrilling historical incidents of that rugged section.
